Kenneth Harder

Hanco Kolk

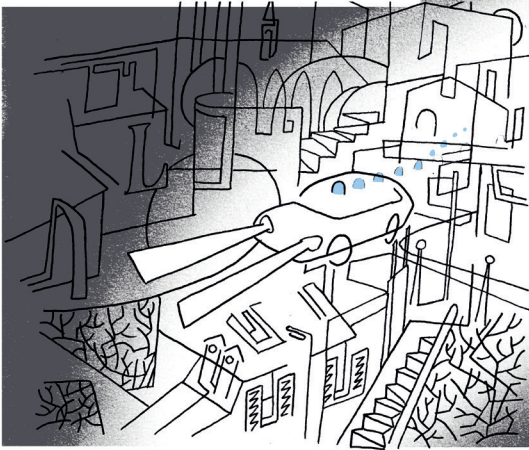

Inspector Kenneth Harder specializes in cover-ups. Whenever an investigation should lead to an undesired outcome, he sets out to find alternative facts and spins the inquiry towards an acceptable culprit. He goes by the nickname The Red Herring, referring to the false clues in detective novels.

But when a mysterious organization starts to spread actual facts and unwanted proof, it demands the utmost of his skills to steer the plot into the right direction... and a lot of bullets.

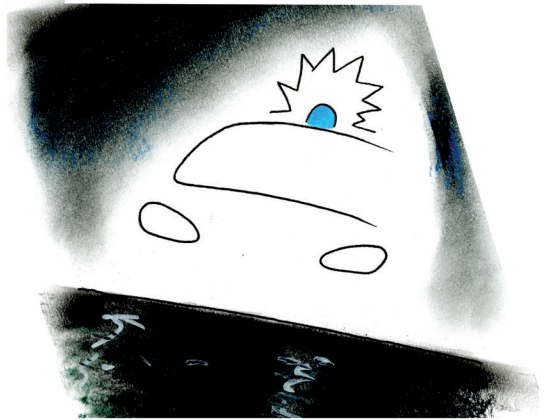

Hanco Kolk is one of the most prominent Dutch comic artists, praised by both mainstream audiences and serious art circles. He is best-known for his humorous creations with collaborator Peter de Wit, with Kolk usually being the illustrator and co-writer. Among their works are the historical adventure comic 'Gilles de Geus' (1983-2003), the photo comic 'Mannetje en Mannetje' (1988-1995) and the newspaper gag comic 'Single' (2000- ...). Kolk is equally renowned for his drawing style, which is linear and has become soberer and more refined over the years.

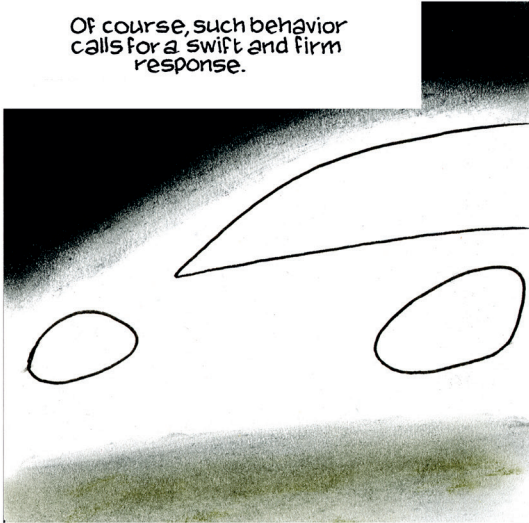

We are living in a society that's under constant threat from democratic elements, like fact-checkers and other far-left terrorists.

They try to undermine the government by spreading information. They stop at nothing when it comes to communicating inconvenient truths.

Of course, such behavior calls for a swift and firm response.

Whenever a crime has been committed, and the investigation starts to lean towards an unwelcome outcome...

...the police call for a specialist.

A mastermind who can produce clues and alternative facts, changing the course toward a more satisfying culprit.

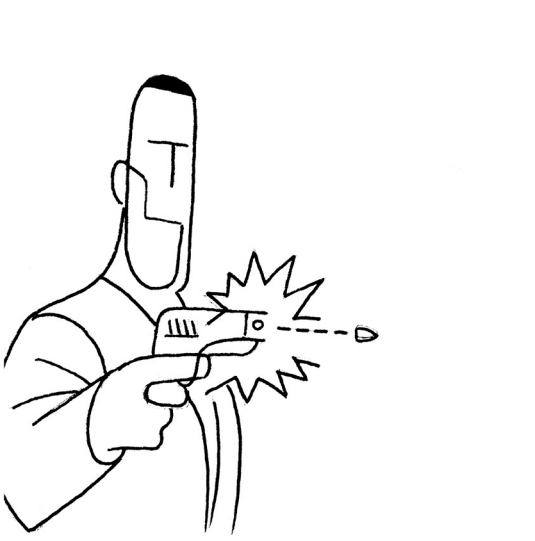

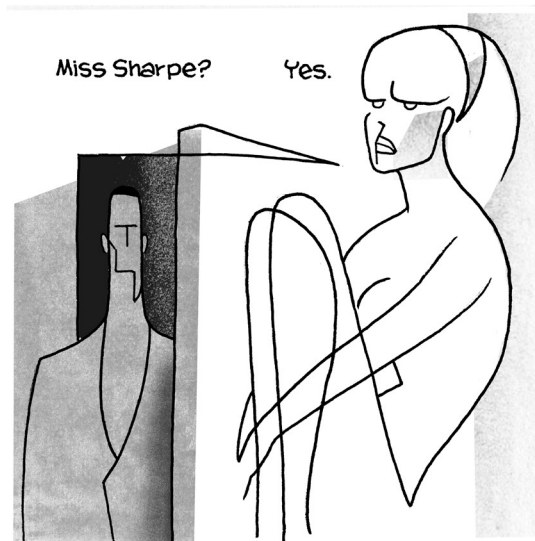

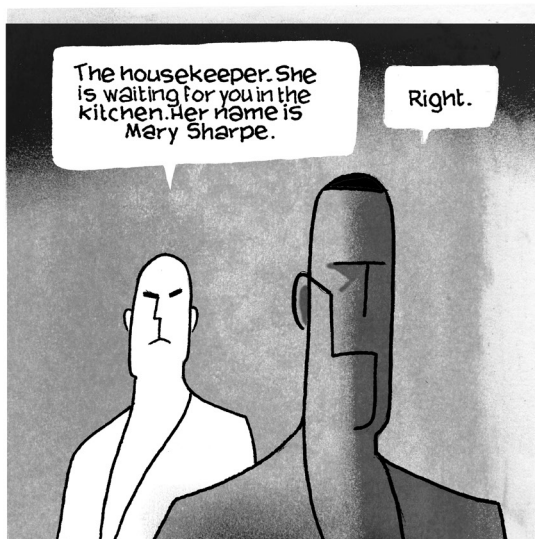

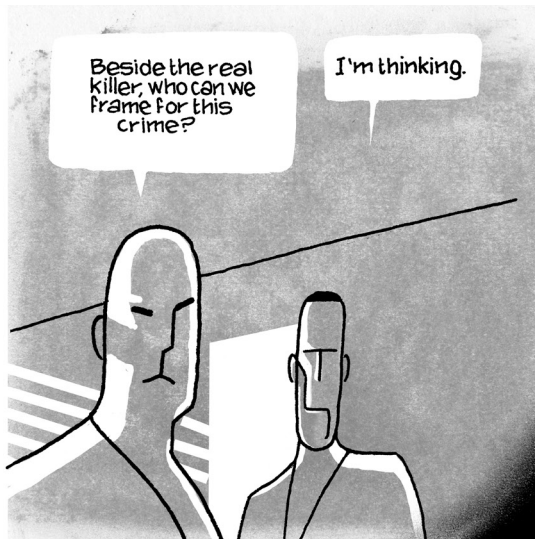

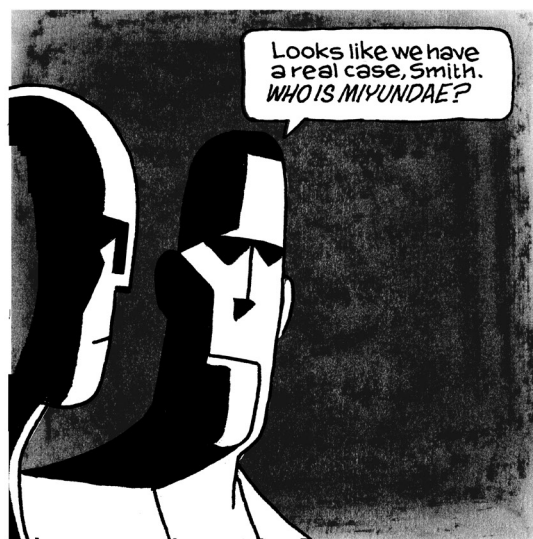

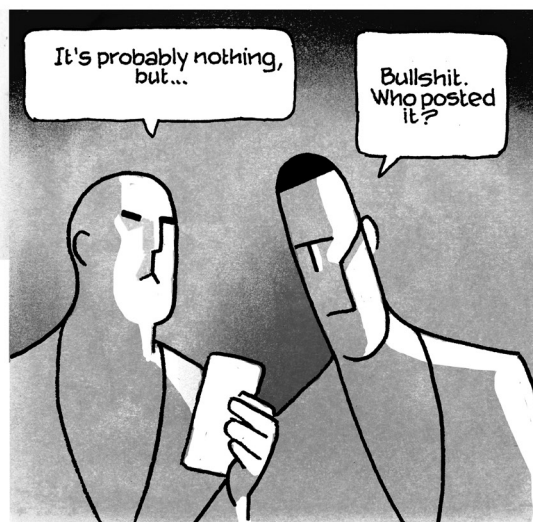

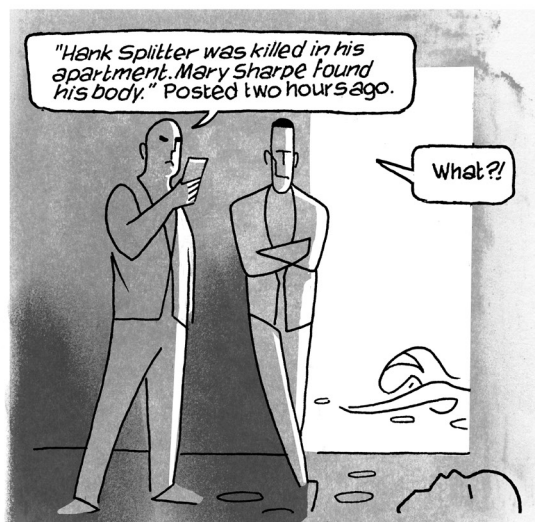

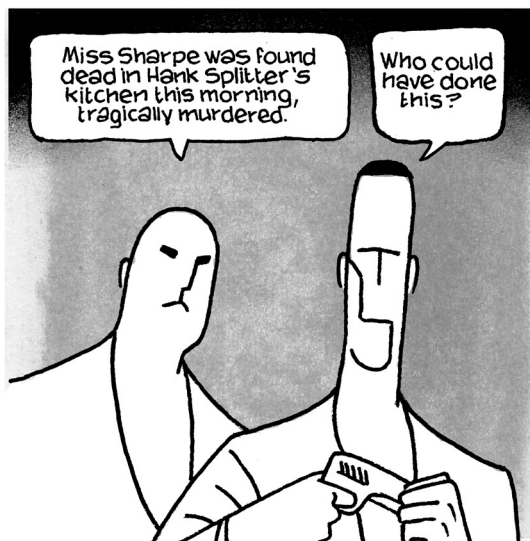

And that's where I come in.

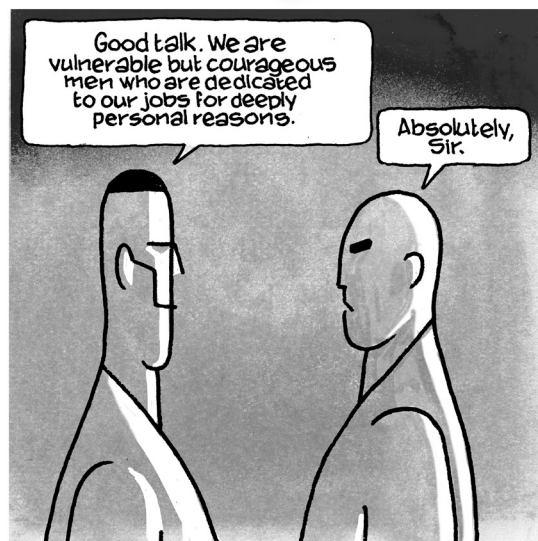

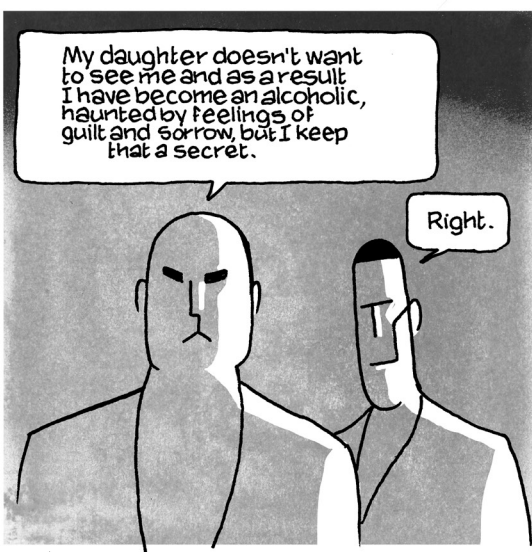

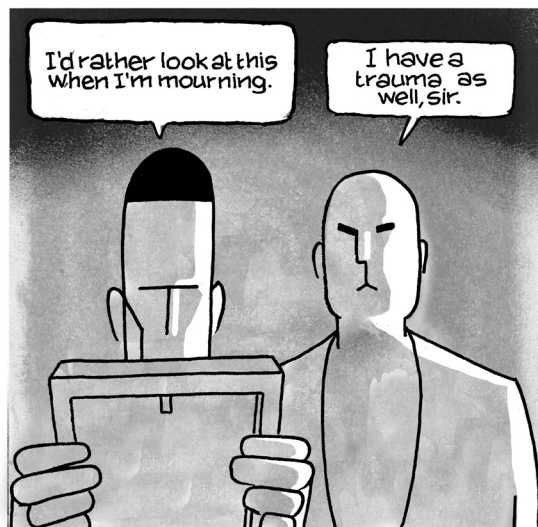

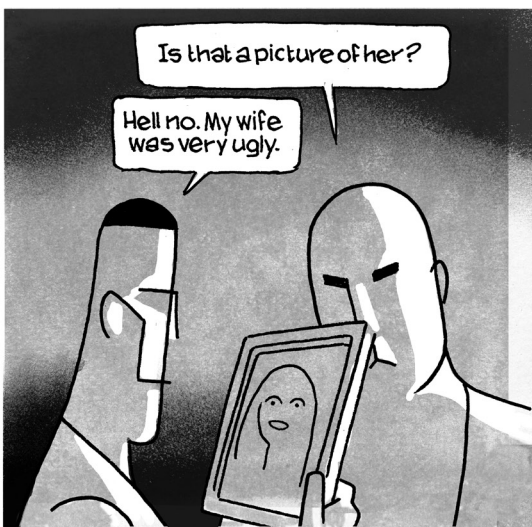

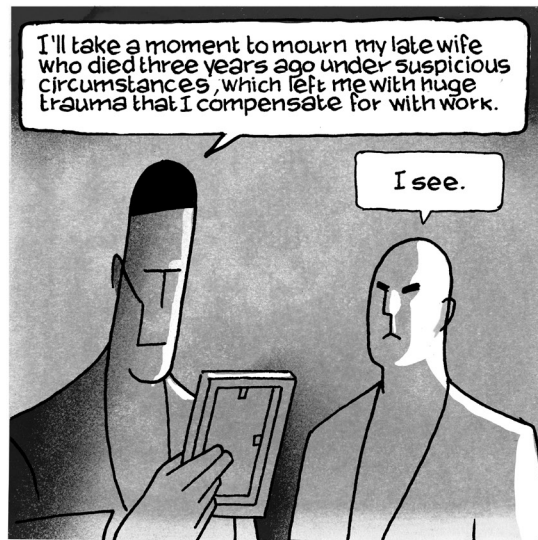

Inspector Harder, complicated man with an extensive backstory, homicide.

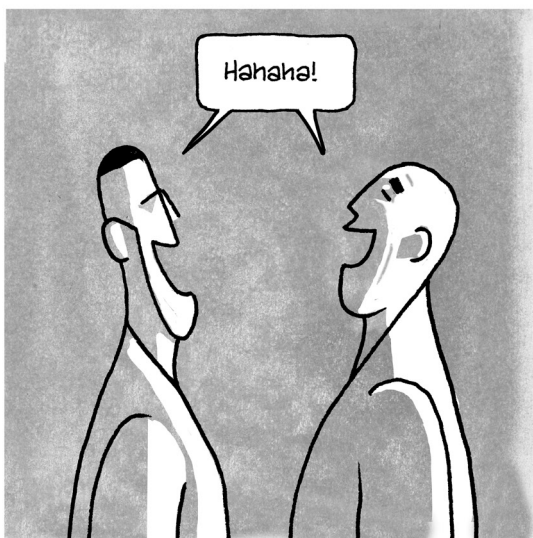

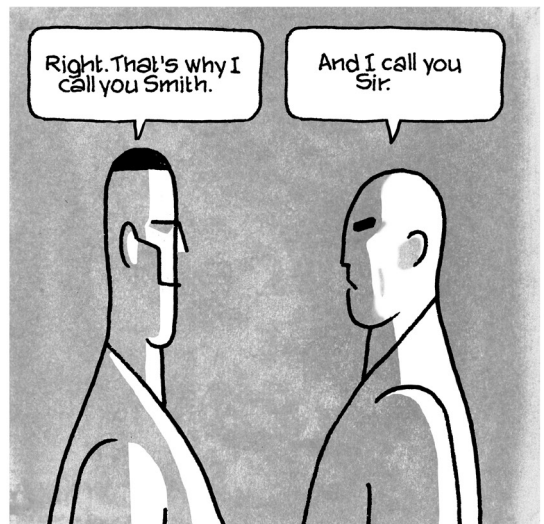

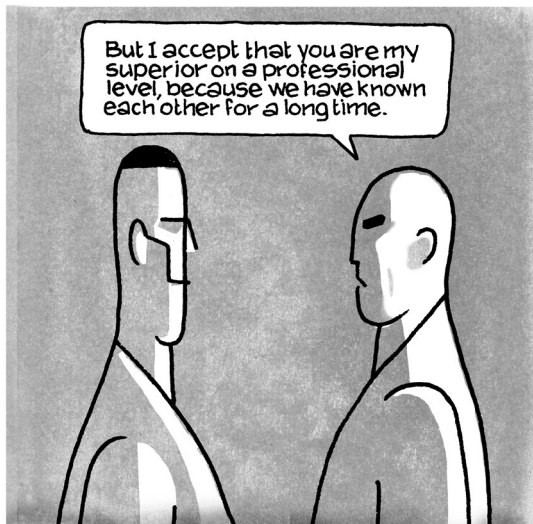

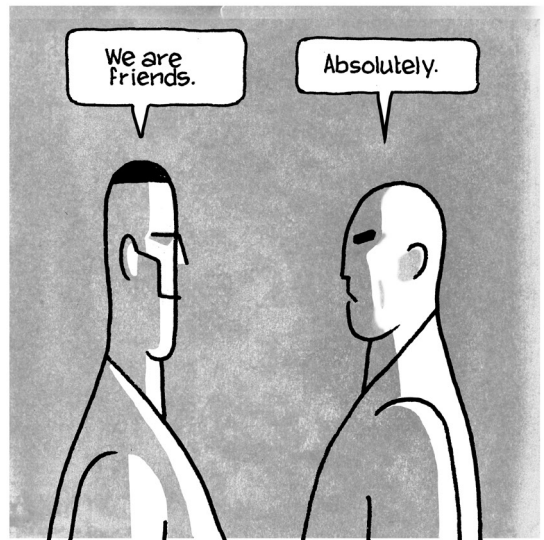

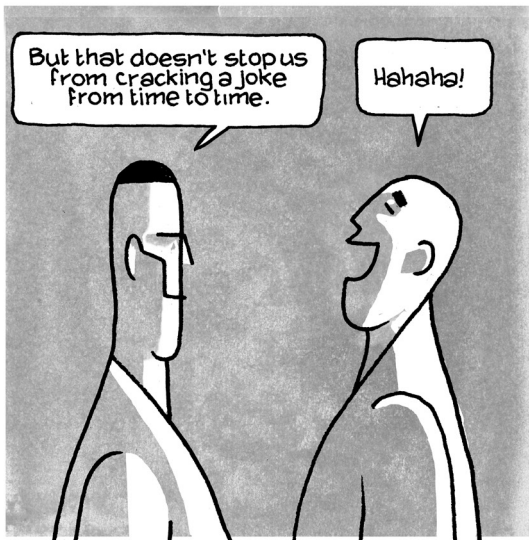

As soon as Smith was gone
I hailed a car

Stop!
Police!

I checked the post. It was just as bad as I expected

Hank Splitter was a far-left liberal democrat who got what he deserved, but that didn't matter anymore.

Welcome to the police station, sir! Everyone here admires you and thinks you're a very good crime fighter, even though you are always grumpy and not very talkative.

Computer person, what can you find out about Miyundae on the Internet and the World Wide Web?
